The relationship between therapist and client. Posted on May 4, 2012 by admin. At the heart of therapy is the therapeutic relationship. The key to the success of counselling is the way that the client and the therapist interact and relate to one another. It is so important for clients to feel heard supported, and for them to know that their therapist thinks about them and holds them in mind.

The therapeutic relationship is the connection and relationship developed between the therapist and client over time. Without the therapeutic relationship, there can be no effective or meaningful therapy. This applies to all forms of counselling and psychotherapy, and regardless of the theoretical orientation of your therapist or counsellor, the relationship developed between you will be considered of high importance.
