And, oh, this just reminds me so much of a lovely poem-In Paris With You, do you know it? If not, do pop it into Google, it's only short-it's by James Fenton. It's definitely more R's style than E's, but if Jehan is going to have a poetic input, this is definitely worth a quick read :) Nicely written, once again, can't wait to see how things progress from here!

Pardon My Heart is an exploration of love in the contemporary African American ethos. In this lyrically complex collection, the speakers and subjects—the adult descendants of the Great Migration—reckon with past experiences and revelatory, hard-earned ideas about race and class. With a compelling blend of narrative, musical
