1) Stay hydrated It's not easy to make yourself drink water when it's really cold, but staying hydrated is crucial to surviving cold temperatures. When you're well-hydrated, you have enough blood volume to keep warm blood pumping to your extremities. 2) Consume lots of calories and food high in fat.

Belmore Browne, artist and mountaineer, prepared engaging, meticulous poster-sized illustrations and extensive, informative lectures for the training of survival techniques in northern climates to USAAF and USAF airmen during World War II and the Korean War. Never previously available to the public, these remarkable reproductions of 38 diagrams by one of America's great illustrators, demonstrate a unique combination of artistry and outdoor survival skills. The lectures and other writings fully explore the challenges and techniques for the crash-landed airman or the Boy Scout or weekend explorer. This book is a rich combination of practical outdoors information, history and creativity from a renaissance man of the 20th century. Assembled and edited by the granddaughter of Belmore Browne from family and other archival collections. Hardcover; large format, 10.5" x 13.75"; 152 pages; printed USA.

It is difficult to imagine how anyone would enter into a polar or mountainous region unprepared. You're prepared for your journey or you arrive by accident; for example, the aircraft you are traveling in has crash-landed over the frozen tundra, or your mode of transport has broken down in the wilderness. In all cases, providing you are uninjured, your chances of survival are good. Planned travel in a cold or mountainous environment should mean that you are well clothed and equipped. In both winter and summer, the Northern Arctic offers an abundant supply of water and food; shelter can be found or constructed above and below the tree line. The real threat comes from the cold, injury, and simply doing nothing. During the Second World War a number of service men became marooned in the arctic wasteland—most of them died. They did so because few ventured far from their crash site, they made no attempt to catch fish, hunt game, or even attempt to travel south. None that were later found had prepared a rescue signal, and most had died not from the cold but from starvation. The SAS Guide to Arctic and Mountain Survival provides details on what to do immediately after your arctic or mountain survival situation has arisen. You will learn how to prepare a shelter, especially on a barren landscape. You will learn how make a fire in the cold and wind, as well as how to find and cook food. This guide provides detailed instructions on navigation, how and when to travel, and how to prepare signal fires
